active in the socialist party in America, and unwilling to accept its recent radically adverses, left the party and is now leader of the Nationalist party.

During the war, Mr. Sparge contributed valuable articles on the subject of why socialism should be pro-ally. His reasons and arguments were in support of sound American ideals of democracy and the internationalism that means the and the internationalism that means the interrelation of all nations by ties of friendship and understanding, each nation respecting the rights of all others, with equal opportunities for all. He differed from Mr. Debs and his comrades upon the issues raised by the war and frankly admitted the nation's right to self defense, and siem action nights all who sought to weaken the national morale. For this he has been termed a patriotic socialist.

Concerning current political movements in America, he regards the Farmer-Labor party as inadequate when it commute to representing the best interests of all who toil, whether in industry or agriculture. He considers that the fundamental evil of syndicalism lies in not recognizing a "Public" with a distinguished from capital and inbor.
